A Compendium of Useful Information

Spurs

A spur is a metal tool designed to be worn in pairs on the heels of riding boots, for the purpose of directing a horse to move forward or laterally while riding. It is usually used to refine the riding commands, and to back up movements from the legs, seat, hands, and voice. The spur is used in many equestrian disciplines. Most modern equestrian organizations have rules covering spur design and use, as well as penalties for using spurs in any manner that constitutes animal abuse.

Etymology:

"Spur" derives from the Old English noun spura or spora, referring to the metal spike worn on a rider's heel to urge a horse forward. This stems from the Proto-Germanic spurô and the Proto-Indo-European root sperH-, meaning "to kick".

Design:

The "yoke", "branch", or "heel band", which wraps around the heel of the boot.

The "shank" or "neck", which extends from the back of the yoke, and is the area that touches the horse.

The rowel, seen on some spurs, a revolving wheel or disk with radiating "points" at the end, attached to the shank.

Spurs are usually held on by a leather or spur strap, that goes over the arch of the foot and under the sole in front of the boot heel. Some Western designs have a leather strap that goes only over the top, with a heel chain instead of a strap under the boot. Also, some styles have no straps, where the heel band is simply very tight and slips on wedged between the sole and heel of the boot. Some spur designs have a slot for running the spur strap through, others have "buttons", sometimes on the heel band itself, and sometimes attached to the heel band by hinges that allow a strap with buttonholes to be attached.

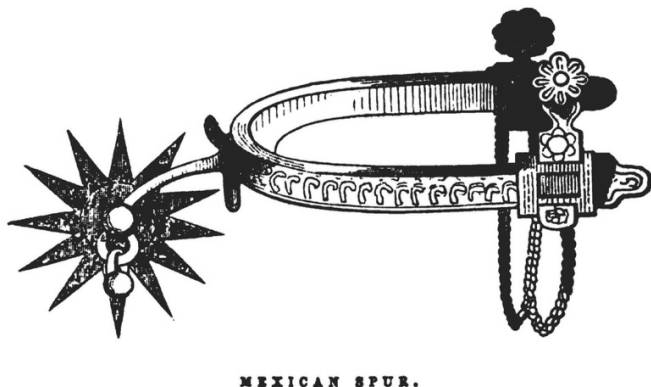

Western-Style Cowboy spurs with rowels, chap guards and buttons for the spur straps. →→→→→

When used in military ranks, senior officers, and officers of all ranks in cavalry, wear a form of spur in certain orders of dress which is known as the box spur, having no spur strap, but a long metal prong opposite the neck, extending between the arms of the heel band, which is inserted into a specially fitted recess or "box" in the base of the boot heel. Due to the prong, such spurs can only be worn with appropriately equipped boots.

Spurs seen in Western riding may also have small curved-up hooks on the shank in front of the rowel, called "chap guards", that were originally used to prevent the rider's chaps from interfering with the rowels of the spur. The shank angle from the yoke can vary from "full" to "one half" to "one quarter" to "straight". Some Cowboys also added small metal jingle bobs near the rowel, to create a jingling sound whenever the foot moved. Rowels can vary in size and number of points.

History:

Mexican Spur (1842)

Western spur rowel with jingo bobs

Spurs have been used since the early days of recorded history. As time progressed, designs went from very simple to more elaborate. These designs reflected the increased abundance of precious metals, particularly silver, that followed the European exploration of the Americas that began in 1492. Spur designs in Spain and colonial Mexico were particularly elaborate. For example, the spurs of the Spanish conquistadores were sometimes called "espuela grande", the "grand spur", and could have rowels as large as 6 inches around.

In northern Europe, the spur became less elaborate after the 16th century, but elaborate spur designs persisted, particularly in the Americas, descendants of which are still seen today, particularly in Mexico and the western United States, where the spur has become an integral part of the Vaquero and Cowboy traditions. The spur as an art form, as well as a tool, is still seen in Western riding, where spurs with engraving and other artistic elements, often handmade and using silver or other precious metals, are still worn.

Collecting of particularly beautiful antique spurs is a popular pastime for some individuals, particularly aficionados of Western history and Cowboy culture.

Basic designs and wear:

Spurs are worn with the tip of the neck pointed downward, sitting on the spur rest of the riding boot, if there is one, with the buckle of the spur strap worn on the outside of the foot.

Spur styles differ between disciplines. Cowboy spurs tend to be heavier, often decorated, and have rowels that rotate. The neck of Cowboy spurs is usually longer and the rowel wide in diameter, to accommodate the leg position of the Cowboy, where the stirrup is adjusted long, and the heavy leather used for the saddle's fenders and stirrups places the rider's leg a bit farther from the horse.

English riding spurs:

Spurs in English riding tend to be very sleek, slim, and conservative in design, with a shorter neck, as the saddle and leg position are closer to the horse. They usually have a rounded or blunt end. Rowels are not as popular as the plain blunt end, although some types include a rowel or smooth disk on the end. When used in sports requiring finesse, the spur's purpose is not to speed up the horse, but to give accurate and precise aids in lateral and complex movements.

Equestrian use:

The spur is a refined tool, designed to allow the rider to transmit very subtle signals to the horse that are nearly invisible to any other observer. No matter the discipline, it is important that a rider has a correct position before using spurs, with a deep seat, legs lengthened to the extent allowed by the stirrups, heels down, with knees and thighs rolled in so that the rider has a solid base of support. A swinging or unstable leg may inadvertently jab the horse with the spur as the rider sits, thus irritating, harming, and frightening the horse, and chronic misuse may deaden it to the leg aids. Improper use may also provoke dangerous or undesirable behaviors such as bucking or bolting.

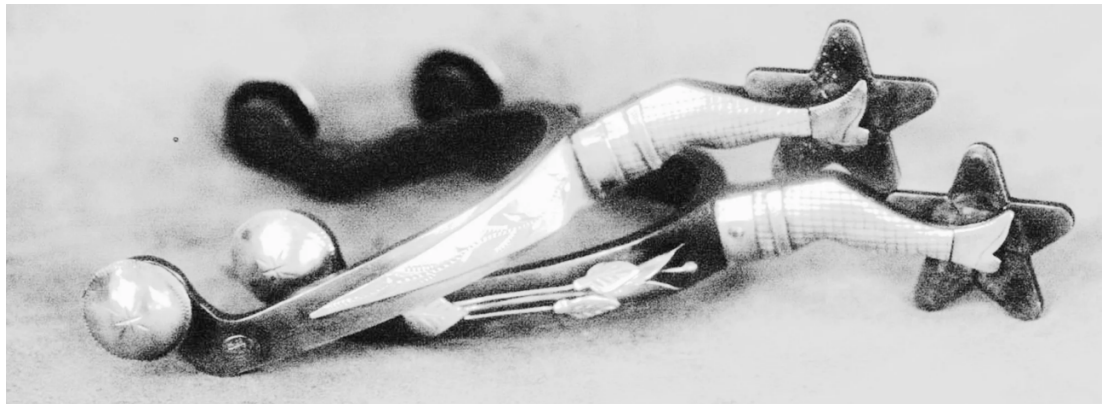

Most spurs are activated by the rider flexing the heel slightly up and in. A roweled spur permits an additional type of action: a rider can roll the spur lightly against the side of the horse rather than being limited simply to pressing inward.

Rodeo spurring:

The exception to the use of spurs in a subtle fashion is in the rodeo events of bull riding , saddle bronc, and bareback riding, where the rider is required to spur in an elaborate, stylized fashion, touching the horse or bull at every stride. This requirement is designed to resemble the behavior of old-time horse-breakers, who would deliberately provoke a horse to buck. In modern times, riders are required to use spurs in a manner that is merely encouraging a horse that is already predisposed to buck; they are not to produce pain. Spur design and use is strictly defined by rodeo rules, spurs are dull, and rowels must turn freely. In fact, the way spurs are to be used in bucking events generally makes it harder for the rider to stay on; in bareback bronc competition, the spurs must be above the point of the horse's shoulder at the first jump and remain forward at all times, deliberately creating a very awkward position for the rider, that requires both strength and coordination to stay on the horse. In saddle-bronc competition, the rider must make a full sweep with the spurs from shoulder to flank with each jump, requiring great concentration, and any error in balance puts the rider in a position to be quickly unseated. Bull riders are allowed a position that is the closest to that of classic riding, they are not required to spur the bull, but if they choose to spur, may do so with their legs down in a style that resembles a normal riding position.

What You Might Not Know About Spurs
Mules and More Magazine Article By Betty Robinson, 2004

"Gal Leg" spurs
by
Rick Brightwell

Close your eyes and consider this scenario.....it's riding time. I don't care what time of day it is, but you know it is time to get on your mount and hit the trail. You pull on your boots, strap on your spurs and head for the door. Now, here's the catch.....did you, even for one minute, consider the history of those spurs you hooked on your boots? You didn't huh? Well, you must be pretty normal, I didn't either, until I met Rick Brightwell. But, this is what I know now.

The spur is one of the earliest essential pieces of equipment used by horsemen. History of the spur traces back so far, most people don't even want to know about it. Did you ever hear about the early stumpy prickspur found in Bohemia in the 4th century BC? These spurs were made of wood or bone with a small pointed stub attached to a heel band and were tied on with a leather thong. I have a feeling these little buggers are pretty rare, so if you happen to find any at the next collectable show, you might want to pick up a set, but expect to pay a buck or two.

Because even early horsemen saw the advantage of using a spur, this piece of equipment evolved rapidly. Material for spurs changed from wood to metal and became more sophisticated as the types of metal changed. The Conquistadors are probably responsible for bringing the spur to the New World and for originating the Vaquero design and workmanship we recognize as Cowboy spurs today. The spur making tradition flourished in Mexico and moved north into the United States as Mexican craftsmen recognized a unique market in the American Cowboy.

While the American cowboy initially wore Mexican spurs, it didn't take long for specific styles to emerge distinguished by region. Texas-style spurs, made in Texas, Colorado, Kansas and Oklahoma were generally cruder than those made in California, Nevada and Oregon. A fancy pair of spurs among cowboys was more an exception than the rule; the fancier the spur, the fancier the price. A cowboy wore the best spur he could afford.....his spurs and his saddle made up his major fashion statement.

In the 1850's, spur makers began to attach a small ball of finely tempered steel, so it would rattle against the long rowels. Texas cowboys christened these spurs the 'jingle bobs'. Such spurs lightened the monotony of a day's work riding long hours across the open prairie. These spurs also performed a truly social function. At work cowboys wore the spurs up tight and ready for action, ready to cue their horses to avoid danger or to get in the correct spot to drop a loop over a steer. But, when Saturday arrived, the spurs were dropped into the 'town notch'.....this allowed the spurs a little drag so they would jingle on the boardwalks as the cowboy strolled down main street. Everyone enjoyed the sound and looks of a good 'jingle bob'.

I think this admiration of a good spur remains today. Have you ever noticed all the glances you get if you forget to take off your spurs before you walk into the local super market?

I met Rick Brightwell at the Lonesome D trailhead. He was there with friends enjoying some good Dutch oven cooking and conversation around the fire. The subject of spurs came up and I discovered Rick is an artisan who makes spurs using traditional, historically correct techniques. In other words, he makes spurs the old fashion way, using only one piece of steel. Most spurs today are two pieces of metal welded together and many of them come by the boxful from China and Taiwan. This guy is a craftsman.

Rick, true to his cowboy roots, is not an arrogant man. He basically keeps his own council. I found getting information out of him is something like squeezing juice out of a rock, until the conversation turned to his passion.....traditional cowboy gear.

“My grandfather, known as Charlie ‘Tex’ Christian to most folks and known as ‘Pa’ to me,” said Rick, “was born in Arkansas, raised in Texas and homesteaded in Jackson Hole, WY in the early 1900’s. He returned to the Ozarks and put together his spread after the Snake River Land Company moved him and the other settlers out of the north end of Jackson Hole Valley in 1928. He always used the high back saddles he brought from Wyoming, while other cowboys used the modern looking saddles with low backs and Cheyenne rolls. All Pa’s gear was the real cowboy stuff. I followed him around a lot when I was young, working cows and such. I’m sure my love for the cowboy ways came straight from Granddad.”

In his 20’s Rick started making cowboy and horse gear for himself. “I wanted authentic looking period gear, 1880’s to the turn of the century,” he said. “At first it was chaps, chinks, and headstalls; then I added wooden stirrups. I mostly did the work for fun and to save myself some money, then I discovered people wanted to buy it.”

Authenticity is the name of the game for Rick. For six years he took part in Civil War reenactments, which helped him study the authenticity of the cavalry equipment. Because correct wooden stirrups were difficult to find, he started the Osage Stirrup Company and now sells authentically designed historic and military stirrups all over the country.

Rick’s work evolved from doing leatherwork, to wooden stirrups and then to spurs and bits. “At first I took over one room of the house,” he said, “but when I started the forge work, it was just too hot and dirty.”

Now he does the hot work in a little shop about 100 yards down the road, and does the engraving and silver work at the shop in the house. Rick’s home is still on his grandfather’s farm in a small rural community near Compton, AR. While Rick and I were visiting a neighbor dropped by and leaned against the door jamb while Rick fired up his furnace. “I guess Rick’s told you how good he is at spur making,” Gordon Keough asked. “Nope, not yet anyway,” I said.

“Didn’t figure he would,” the neighbor replied, “that’s why I dropped over. He seldom toots his own horn, but he can sell his stuff faster than he can make it. He even works on spurs while he is on his lunch hour down at the post office. Did he tell you about the new book he was published in? Ask his wife, she’ll show you a copy of it.”

I asked Rick to start at the beginning. I’ve never seen a stirrup or a spur made, and this seemed like a golden opportunity I didn’t want to miss.

Rick fished a chunk of wood out of a tub filled with water from under one of his workbenches. For the next five minutes he talked to convince me that the wood was going to end up a stirrup. After looking at the molds Rick uses and listening to the explanation, I finally consented I could see how it might happen. What knowledge and skill it takes to cause that transformation!

The person who had the biggest influence on Rick's work was the late spur maker Louis Bryant of Tecumseh, OK. Louis hand-forged spurs and bits, and was well into his 70's when he finally took Rick under his wing. Rick made many trips to Tecumseh to watch, learn, and listen to Louis. At Louis Bryant's death, Rick received the original patterns for heel bands and shanks, as well as many of his tools. Rick proudly carries on the tradition.

A completed pair of spurs designed and made by Rick Brightwell

“One of the most important assets available to today's Western gear artisans is the interaction and communication taking place between makers. Craftsmen no longer guard techniques the way they used to, much more sharing is taking place.”

Rick believes that form follows function. Form is for the person and function is for the horse or mule. The horse doesn't care so much about the polish and shine or how much silver or gold is inlaid on the shank. They care how the bit fits in the mouth and how it functions. It is the artisan's job to please them both.

I watch Rick tap on that white hot metal and watched a spur take shape. Not only does he forge a beautiful spur from one piece of 5/8ths inch steel, he can make one to match it for the other side. Now that's where the trick is. Rick doesn't take much credit for what he does. He gives credit for his training to Louis Bryant and credits Evalea, his wife, for his artistic ideas. He says she is the main contributor to the sketches and patterns he puts on his spurs. Seems to me he has a good thing going.

After we watched Rick build spurs for a while, that red-hot forge not only brought on a sweat, it was making us all pretty thirsty. Evalea saved the day when she appeared in the door asking if we wanted some iced tea and homemade zucchini bread on the porch? We weren't too rude, but I do think Rick may have still been looking around when the group lit a shuck up the road to the porch.

If you want to see some gorgeous spurs, drop by the Compton, Ark., post office sometime and ask for the Postmaster. Tell him Betty Robinson sent you. You won't regret it. This guy is good. (Osage Stirrup Company, P O Box 861, Compton, AR 72624; rbright@alltel.net)

Pistols

GLOCK MVB920 G22-G3 40mm Pistol Matte Black

USED Glock G22-Generation 3, chambered in 40mm. Made in Austria & Lifetime warranty! This is a spectacular find. It shows some signs of being fired a few times, but it mostly looks like it was carried [and based on the amount of lint inside the barrel] and not cleaned frequently. The only significant wear I could find was on the slide release. With an adjustable rear sight. 10 MAR 2017

The bore is in great shape, it's nice and shiny and the rifling looks good. All the Mags and Extras are in great shape as well.

Winchester 109543 24 12 Ga Side/Side Double Barrel Blue

Winchester Model 24 SXS Shotgun. 2-3/4" chambers Full Choke and Modified. Mfg date:

1952. The Model 24 competes with the Stevens 311 and Savage/Fox Model B as an affordable, utility SXS and a total of over 116,200 were Mfgd. The Model 24 is a true hammerless gun, as opposed to having concealed hammers like most double guns, since it is striker fired. It was produced only as a field grade gun with blued receiver and barrels, wide 7/16" raised solid rib, smooth black walnut stock with lacquer finish, double triggers, and spring powered extractors that elevates the shells when the gun is opened. The forged steel receiver body of the Model 24 is rounded. The Model 24 was designed with two lumps, one centered beneath each barrel, leaving a tunnel of space between the two lumps. It has a clean breech face and is held closed by a single underbolt that engages a notch in the double barrel lumps. In the area between the 24's dual lumps is a cocking slide and the extractor. The Model 24 is about as wide through the breech and receiver as a SXS gun can be. The weight is about 7-1/2 pounds. It is a 12 Ga gun with 30" barrels. It measures 46-1/2" in overall length and has a 14-1/4" length of pull. Approximate drop is 1-1/2" at comb and 2-1/2" at heel.

News & Notes

Six Stages

We shoot six stages at Tusco. A few people have told us that they drive a good distance to shoot at Tusco and would like to shoot as much as possible.

Obviously we only have room for five shooting bays. So what we do is shoot the first stage you start on twice. Consider it a warm up stage. Only five stages will be scored. You can take your best time on your first stage. If you don't want to shoot it twice you do not have to. This would provide more shooting for our shooters.

New SASS Magazine

With the new release of the SASS Quarterly Cowboy Chronicle, I once again would like to start collecting any unwanted issues of the magazine. We will use these for our promotional events, like our Tusco Long Riders' Day at Kames Sports. Please either black out or cut off your name and address or I will do it before they are passed out. Thank you!

Facebook Page

When you make a post about Tusco or share pictures on Facebook, include #TuscoLongRiders. Let everyone see what we are all about.

News & Notes

New Shooters Shoot for Free at Tusco

The Tusco Long Riders will be offering FREE SHOOTS to ALL FIRST TIME SHOOTERS AT TUSCO. This is ONLY for a shooter's first ever shoot at Tusco. (*this is only for monthly matches, excluding High Noon 3-day Shoot in October, and the Charity Shoot in November.)

Cowboy Swap Meet at Monthly Shoots

As a reminder, feel free to bring your old Cowboy Gear, Guns and Equipment to sell at our monthly shoots. It's a good opportunity to sell some of your unwanted stuff to your fellow shooters. Your items are your responsibility.

Pre-Paid Shoots

Looking for that perfect Gift for your Cowboy Friends and Family? How about a Pre-paid Shoot to a Tusco Monthly Match. They cost $10.00 each at a shoot or they can be mailed for $10.50. Contact Buckaroo Bubba at pittfandwr@aol.com or 330-348-5637 if you would like to purchase them.

Help Wanted at Tusco

If you are available to help set up target stands/props before our shoots it would be greatly appreciated.

A little bit about us

Jim & I have always wanted a family of our own. Although we love our 5 fur kids, we long for a baby. After learning we were unable to conceive a child, Jim and I decided to pursue the adoption of a newborn. Adoption costs are astronomical (anywhere from 25k to 50k or higher) and although we were able to raise some with our savings, GoFundMe page, and church donations, we are still lacking the funds needed to apply for a match. We decided to take our love of crafting and open a side business to hopefully raise some more funds for our future family. Designs By Scamper is a tribute to our pup Scamper who passed away in 2015 from cancer.
