High Noon at Tusco 2023 Date Change

2023 High Noon at Tusco – September 29th, 30th, and October 1st

We have made the decision to change the dates of High Noon at Tusco 2023. Previously the dates were set for October 6th, 7th, and 8th, 2023. It was brought to my attention that the SASS National Championships, “Land Run” starts on October 7th with the opening ceremonies on Wednesday October 11th.

About 32% of our recent past attendees at High Noon will be shooting at the National Championships in Oklahoma. In an effort to help with travel plans for Land Run and to make it possible for those shooters to attend High Noon at Tusco, we have decided to move our match up one week to Friday, September 29th, Saturday September 30th, and Sunday October 1st. With there being five weekends in September this move was possible. The Tusco Rifle Club was very accommodating for us to make this move. This change is being made for this year only..right now.

I apologize if this causes any inconvenience with scheduling. We decided this was in the best interest of our shooters and for High Noon at Tusco.

Thank you for understanding.

A Compendium of Useful Information -- April, 2023

Theodore Roosevelt -- Cowboy in the Old West -- 1883

For Theodore Roosevelt it was love at first sight. The young New Yorker, plagued in boyhood by illness and a sense of physical insufficiency, had long dreamed of the West. Its explorers, hunters, soldiers and cowboys became his heroes -- the models of the man he struggled to be. On a break from a budding political career, he took a Western vacation in 1883. He rode a train across the prairies west of Chicago and onto the high plains of Dakota Territory. In the middle of the night the Northern Pacific conductor deposited him at the scruffy hamlet of Little Missouri, where the rail line crossed the river of that name.

“It was bitterly cold,” he wrote to his wife, Alice, though the calendar registered early September. “And it was some time before, groping about among the four or five shanties which formed the ‘town,’ I found the low, small building called the ‘hotel.’” Roosevelt hammered on the door, and eventually roused the innkeeper, who cursed him for spoiling his sleep. The visitor was shown to a barracks room, where he spent the rest of the night amid snoring, snorting men, the likes of which the silk-stocking Manhattanite had rarely seen, let alone slumbered with.

The scenery didn't improve on closer examination. Roosevelt enlisted a guide to show him the crazily eroded terrain was called "the Badlands." They rode mustangs around and through the gullies, hoodoos, buttes and cliffs. It was "frightful ground," Roosevelt said. And utterly inhospitable. "There is very little water, and what there is, is so bitter as to be almost a poison, and nearly undrinkable."

The autumn rains commenced upon Roosevelt's arrival, and for days the sky poured, drizzled and misted, turning ground that had been dusty just days before, into a sticky, bottomless gumbo. Roosevelt had come to Dakota to hunt buffalo; he had been told that some of the last remnants of the once uncountable herds had been seen on the Little Missouri. But his guide was reluctant to venture out into the slop. "The buffalo knew enough to take shelter", he said; "so should hunters." Yet Roosevelt insisted, and offered a bonus, so out they went. They got cold, soaked and muddy, and they found no buffalo. But Roosevelt, who equated tests of the body with tests of the soul, found the experience exhilarating. He had been slightly ailing before coming west, but no longer. "I am now feeling very well, and am enjoying the life very much," he told Alice.

Eventually the weather broke, and his guide located a buffalo -- a feat the nearsighted Roosevelt could never have managed on his own. Roosevelt skirted downwind of the beast, which was even more myopic than he was, and crawled close enough to get a shot. He fired once, then twice more, and the buffalo took off running. Roosevelt thought he might have missed, but he and the guide gave chase, and after crossing a ridge they discovered the buffalo lying dead on its side. Roosevelt whooped for joy and did a victory dance. He pulled out a hundred-dollar bill and gave the guide a bonus.

The experience persuaded Roosevelt to plant a flag in the West. His difficulty finding a buffalo drove home the fact that the West was changing; the indigenous bovines were being replaced by introduced ones: cattle. Roosevelt scouted the opportunities for investment in the cattle industry, and before he left Dakota he designated two locals as his agents, with instructions to buy him a cattle ranch.

He made an odd figure for a cowboy. His laconic neighbors chuckled at the “Bully!” and “Deeelighted!” that burst from his mouth. His thick eyeglasses earned him the inevitable moniker “Four-eyes,” which alternated with “the Dude.” But his determination and stamina eventually won him the respect of his new comrades. He learned to ride like a cowboy, rope like a cowboy, herd cattle like a cowboy, stand up to thieves and other bad men like a cowboy.

He poured his inheritance into his Dakota ranch, and, following the untimely death of his wife, he poured his heart into it. He dreamed of becoming a cattle baron, a Western equivalent of the business tycoons of the East. Many others had made fortunes in the West; why couldn't he?

He learned soon enough. Winters in Dakota had been deceptively mild during the brief time since whites had begun settling there. The winter of 1886–1887 reverted to the mean winters of the past. Rainfall had been scantier than usual that summer, and it didn't pick up in the fall. The cattle became thin, rather than packing on the weight needed to carry them through the winter. Then, winter came early. A typical winter on the plains featured brief storms that dropped a few-to-several inches of dry snow on the ground and then abated. The air might be cold, but the snow wasn't too deep for the cattle to paw aside, baring the cured grass beneath. This winter was different. The first storm came in November as a full-bore blizzard. It caught the cattle not only thin from the summer, but lacking their winter coats.

It dropped drifts of snow that defied the efforts of the hungry animals to dig through it.

Where they did manage to penetrate to the bottom of the drifts, there wasn't any grass, due to the summer's drought. This first storm was followed by another, and another.

Temperatures plummeted far below zero.

The cowboys, who normally thought nothing of risking their lives for the cattle, couldn't leave their cabins without themselves freezing in minutes.

The cattle sought shelter in creek bottoms and wherever the wind slackened.

But it was in precisely these places that the snow drifted deepest, burying the cows until they couldn't move or even breathe.

The winter went on and on. The cattlemen could only guess at the toll it was taking on the herds. When spring finally came, they got their answer. "In the latter part of March came the Chinook wind, harbinger of spring, releasing for the first time the iron grip that had been upon us," recalled a neighbor of Roosevelt on the Little Missouri. "At last, it seemed, the wrath of Nature had been appeased." The ice in the river broke apart, and the stream brought it down in big chunks. It soon brought something else, something the cattlemen could never have imagined. "For days on end, tearing down with the grinding ice cakes, went Death's cattle roundup of the upper Little Missouri country," Roosevelt's neighbor continued. "In countless valleys, gulches, washouts, and coulees, the animals had vainly sought shelter from the relentless ‘Northern Furies’ on their trail. Now their carcasses were being spewed forth in untold thousands by the rushing waters, to be carried away on the crest of the foaming, turgid flood rushing down the valley.”

Roosevelt’s Western dream didn’t survive that brutal winter. He gradually retired from the West and returned to politics in the East. But he never lost his emotional connection to the West, nor his belief that the West, for all its ability to shatter dreams, was where the American spirit shone brightest and most true.

It was produced only as a field grade gun with blued receiver and barrels, wide 7/16" raised solid rib, smooth black walnut stock with lacquer finish, double triggers, and spring powered extractors that elevates the shells when the gun is opened. The forged steel receiver body of the Model 24 is rounded. The Model 24 was designed with two lumps, one centered beneath each barrel, leaving a tunnel of space between the two lumps. It has a clean breech face and is held closed by a single underbolt that engages a notch in the double barrel lumps. In the area between the 24's dual lumps is a cocking slide and the extractor. The Model 24 is about as wide through the breech and receiver as a SXS gun can be. The weight is about 7-1/2 pounds. It is a 12 Ga gun with 30" barrels. It measures 46-1/2" in overall length and has a 14-1/4" length of pull. Approximate drop is 1-1/2" at comb and 2-1/2" at heel. $500

News & Notes

Six Stages

We shoot six stages at Tusco. A few people have told us that they drive a good distance to shoot at Tusco and would like to shoot as much as possible.

Obviously we only have room for five shooting bays. So what we do is shoot the first stage you start on twice. Consider it a warm up stage. Only five stages will be scored. You can take your best time on your first stage. If you don't want to shoot it twice you do not have to. This would provide more shooting for our shooters.

New SASS Magazine

With the new release of the SASS Quarterly Cowboy Chronicle, I once again would like to start collecting any unwanted issues of the magazine. We will use these for our promotional events, like our Tusco Long Riders' Day at Kames Sports. Please either black out or cut off your name and address or I will do it before they are passed out. Thank you!

Facebook Page

When you make a post about Tusco or share pictures on Facebook, include #TuscoLongRiders. Let everyone see what we are all about.

A little bit about us

Jim & I have always wanted a family of our own. Although we love our 5 fur kids, we long for a baby. After learning we were unable to conceive a child, Jim and I decided to pursue the adoption of a newborn. Adoption costs are astronomical (anywhere from 25k to 50k or higher) and although we were able to raise some with our savings, GoFundMe page, and church donations, we are still lacking the funds needed to apply for a match. We decided to take our love of crafting and open a side business to hopefully raise some more funds for our future family. Designs By Scamper is a tribute to our pup Scamper who passed away in 2015 from cancer.
